

MAIN LESSON BOOKWORK

1. Below there are four conjunctive words (which are words that join sentences together to avoid the use of a full stop.) Your job will be to use each conjunctive word only once to join the sentences for the Battle of Troy, together. You can check your answers on the last page of this document – I hope it's fun! Please complete this in your draft books, you will be writing this as a good copy tomorrow.

Conjunctive Words
and	so	but	however

Paris arrived in Troy with Helen the Greeks followed in warships carrying thousands of warriors.
Once ashore, the Greeks built a great camp, Troy attacked when they were still at work.
Many battles followed neither side were victorious even with the Gods' help.
Finally, the Trojan hero Hector killed Achilles' friend Patroclus, Achilles went to meet him in a fight to the death.

2. Ok, now it is time to write your good copy of the writing you corrected yesterday with the title 'Helen Goes to Troy.' Remember your border, title and to write neatly. From what I am seeing of work coming in, you are going really well making up your own borders and writing neatly – it's great seeing your creativity shine through!
3. Once all your writing is finished, it's time to do the drawing. There are many battle scenes in this story and if one stuck out to you, please feel free to draw that. Otherwise you could draw Aphrodite protecting Paris with her invisibility veil from Menelaus, or Hector killing Patroclus, perhaps Achilles is waiting for Hector, or maybe you want to draw the Greeks taking the priest of Apollo's daughter... up to you! In terms of the background of your drawings, the Greeks set up their camp a short distance from the beach, so you would see the sea on the Greek's side and the huge Trojan city on Troy's side, all behind massive stone walls – which the Greeks could no find a way to get through in all these battles. To those who love to draw battle scenes – yes, this is your chance! There was death and blood, there were hundreds dying in each battle – but if you want to draw a battle scene, make sure there are at least two characters fighting in the foreground, large enough so we can see their movements, weapons and armour. No stick figures please!

Correct conjunctives:

The Battle for Troy

Paris arrived in Troy with Helen and the Greeks followed in warships carrying thousands of warriors. Once ashore, the Greeks built a great camp, however Troy attacked when they were still at work. Many battles followed but neither side were victorious even with the Gods' help. Finally, the Trojan hero Hector killed Achilles' friend Patroclus, so Achilles went to meet him in a fight to the death.
